INTRODUCTION

This year, PEPS (The Association of Valuers, Property Managers, Estate Agents and Property Consultants in the Private Sector Malaysia) has decided to undertake a mid-year review of the property market for Malaysia. We believe that with the greater flow of quality property information and analyses into the market, it will assist in increasing the general efficiency of the property market as the market grapples with slowdowns in some sub-sectors of the market and in oversupply conditions in other sub-sectors.

For the past 9 years, PEPS has in fact organised an annual event, usually in the month of January, in Kuala Lumpur, and these events have become an industry torch bearer in that the quality of information and analyses of the property market has increased substantially, from year to year, and accordingly the number of attendees have also increased. At each of the events, participants not only get to follow the proceedings for the usual one full day Summit, but are provided with the papers and powerpoint presentations for subsequent reference and use. The materials provided are of high quality as they are usually done by our senior practising Valuers and Consultants.

At present the property market in Malaysia is facing many new challenges as it grapples with forces and factors that may underlie an indication of “Shifting Fundamentals?”, a term we now adopt as the Theme for the Mid-Year Review. There is a general slowdown of the economy, the Ringgit depreciation, lower oil prices, a persistently high household debt, rising costs to households and businesses, slower consumer spending, a contraction in the oil and gas sector and many such challenges.

From the regional and global perspective there are equal challenges such as in the United States, Europe, Japan and China, along with much of the rest of the world as they attempt to shake off the after effects of the Global Financial Crisis of 2008. The United States which is the leading economic power house globally has yet to normalise its interest rates and while in December 2015 it initiated an upward movement in the interest rates regime, from the ultra-low levels since the crisis, it has not been able to continue with the promised upward trajectory, indicating clearly the parlous state of the global economy.

Europe is beset with a chronic malaise of threatened deflation and it has resorted to negative interest rates as a measure to turn away from the threat. Japan has also experimented with negative interest rates and is still relying on Abenomics to drag itself out of any deflationary tendencies. China which has been a strong global economic partner for many countries, especially in this region has markedly slowed down as it transits from its export driven model to a domestically driven model, with the consequent enormous negative implications for other emerging markets and markets such as the commodities markets.

We cannot look at the Malaysian Property Market and its various sub-sectors in isolation. It is but a cog in an overall economic ecosystem and the PEPS yearly summits have been designed with just that in mind.

Our Mid-Year Review will, as usually, adopt a top down approach in looking at the property market. We will look at global forces and factors, regional issues and national challenges as we analyse the final down-the-line numbers in the property market and the various sub-sectors of the property market in Malaysia. We intend to cover, all the regions of Peninsular Malaysia and East Malaysia, as well as each of the major sub-sectors of the market.

For each sub-sector, our invited speakers will do the following:

- Outline the historical background with data and analysis;
- Look at the geographical spread and classifications;
- Delve into its relative importance to the industry;
- Examine the relationship of the sector to the economy and the overall market;
- Highlight the last three years' activities;
- Give opinions on what has transpired including an analyses of the drivers affecting the sector;
- Outline the key drivers that will propel the sector in the future;
- State opinions on what direction the market will take based on his or her analysis.

The Malaysian Property Summit – Mid-Year Review 2016 (MPS-MYR2016) is a property conference that must not be missed and we look forward to your attendance.
